

BUSINESS MEDIATION

A commercial conflict can take up a lot of your time: you want to forge ahead but a difference of opinion with a business partner, shareholder or director is holding you back. The question is: how do you resolve this problem without an interminable tug of war or a lawsuit that just drags on and on? And the answer? Well, sometimes a solution can be closer to hand than you think...

If you clash with a company or person about a commercial matter then this can cause uncertainty and really affect your business operations. It may relate to a dispute about a contract with a domestic or foreign company, a disagreement between partners or shareholders or interaction with a director. Most issues can be resolved just by discussing them but sometimes you can't do this on your own. This is where business mediation can come in, as it can really help you to break through that impasse. The goal of mediation is that the parties themselves - guided by the mediator - end up with practical agreements about the way forward and thus arrive at a long-term solution for the issue at hand.
